I'm working in C#. I've an ASP.NET web application with a form using a control with a drop down box for a list of servers. I've populated the dropdown box using a data-source method. The user selects a server and hits "OK". The desired action is to retrieve some data from the server. Everything works fine until I try to then retrieve some data from the server. When the page loads for the second time I get an error saying Object reference not set to an instance of an object Here's the line in question MessageBox.Show(cboServer.SelectedValue.ToString()); The same code works fine in the console but not in the web app. There are no errors showing up in the browser or in the event log. It seems to just not get the data from the database when it loads, but as soon as I reload the page it gets the data from the db. Why would this work in the console and not in the web app? This is a LINQ query that is used with the data source for the list
